Truth In Media's Joshua Cook followed up with Oath Keepers president Stewart Rhodes to provide an update on the Oath Keepers' presence in Ferguson.

Cook asked Rhodes, "what is the media getting wrong about your group?"

"One of the first things they said was that our presence was inflammatory," answered Rhodes. "And it's quite the opposite. There were actually no shots fired and interesting enough, no arrests made while our guys were on the streets. And we protected several black owned businesses again like we did last year."

"The point of us being there is, (a), lead by example and show the people of Ferguson this is how you prevent arson, this is how you protect against looting, etc. And (b), protect your community so that you don't have this false choice that's being presented to the American people- that the only way to stop arson and looters is to trample on the First Amendment Rights of the protesters or to have a hyper-militarized police state. The American people are being given a false choice," said Rhodes....
