If you took an Oath to the Constitution as part of becoming a Corrections Officer, then, yes, you can be a full member. If you didn't, you can still be an Associate Member.

Shorty

I don't know why a cop hating organization would back OK, but if they do, they must misunderstand the OK organization and miss understand that plenty of active LEOs belong to the OK organization.

My family fully supports law enforcement and I just provided a two year membership to my father as a gift. He is pro military and pro law enforcement. My husband is retired military and pro law enforcement and he is going to join OK.

We all know there are bad apples in every agency and business and we know it is our duty to call out corruption where we find it. I also know that I tend to believe the servicemen's or LEO's story first, wait for the facts to come out. So, I do have a pro LE bias.

To your point of you having already broken the OK oaths – the oaths speak of warrantless search and seizures and arrests that would currently be considered unlawful (thus the arrest would not stand up) – I doubt that you any of the arrests, searches or seizures you have made are warrantless or unlawful, thus I don't believe you have broken the oaths put forth by the organization.

My apologies that I have droned on and I certainly do not speak for the OK association as a whole, but I wanted to give a voice as someone who's Father and Husband have/will shortly join.
